Report Name: Serbia Bans Export of Refined Sunflower Edible Oil

Country: Serbia

Post: Belgrade

Report Category: Grain and Feed, Oilseeds and Products

Prepared By: Tatjana Maslac

Approved By: Charles Rush

Report Highlights:

On March 17, the Serbian Government added refined sunflower edible oil to the list of grains and oilseeds that cannot be exported because of their importance to food security. In the same amendment the Serbian Government removed raw sunflower seed oil from the list that is now free for export.

Summary:

On March 17, the Serbian Government amended the Decree on Export Ban on export of food products important for food stability (“Official Gazette” No. 32/2022). The ban takes effect March 18, 2022, without an end date. With the new amendment, Serbia now bans exports of wheat, wheat flour, rye, corn, cornmeal and refined sunflower seed oil, while the raw sunflower seed oil was removed from the list. Goods that have been custom cleared and are enroute to borders are not subject to the export ban.

List of the goods that are banned for export:

Tariff Number	Commodity description
1001 19 00 00 00	Durum wheat, except seed wheat
1001 99 00 00 00	Wheat and rye, except seed wheat
1005 90 00 00 00	Corn, except seed corn
1101 00 11 00 00	Durum wheat flour
1101 00 15 00 00	Wheat flour
1101 00 90 00 00	Rye flour
1103 13 10 00 01	Cornmeal, with fat below 1.5%
1103 13 90 00 01	Cornmeal, with fat above 1.5%
1512 19 10 00 00	Refined sunflower oil, edible

Serbian farmers, grain and oilseeds associations, traders, exporters, and logistics companies continue protesting and demanding compensation from the state for not being able to export their goods especially while prices are at record highs. Their request to the state is to impose export quotas versus an export ban. Serbia has sufficient wheat and corn to meet domestic demand and surpluses that could be exported until the new harvest.
