Report Highlights:

On December 23, 2024, the European Union published Regulation 2024/3234, which officially delayed the entry into application of the European Union Deforestation Regulation (EUDR) until December 30, 2025. No additional revisions beyond the postponement were made. Guidance documents and training resources are now available for stakeholders.

Entry into Application Postponed until December 30, 2025

On December 23, 2024, the European Union published Regulation 2024/3234 amending the EU Deforestation Regulation (EUDR - Regulation 2023/1115) in the Official Journal.

For more information about the EUDR, please see European Institutions Finalize Deforestation-Free Supply Chain Regulation.

This amendment postpones the entry into application of the EUDR by one year, to December 30, 2025, for most operators, and June 30, 2026, for small and medium sized operators. The amendment also stipulates that country risk benchmarking determinations should be published by June 30, 2025.

As part of the postponement, the European Commission also published an official statement (see attachment) in which it commits to analyze, based on impact assessments, additional measures to simplify and reduce administrative burdens in the context of the general review of the Regulation, expected no later than June 30, 2028.

Implementation Guidance

In October 2024, the European Commission published an updated version of a Frequently Asked Questions document on the EUDR. These FAQs address questions linked to:

- Traceability
- Scope
- Subjects of Obligations
- Definitions
- Due Diligence
- Benchmarking and partnerships
- Supporting Implementation
- Timelines
- Other Questions
- Penalties

In October 2024, the Commission also published an Implementing Guidance Document as a Commission notice in the EU's Official Journal. Annex I and II of the guidance documents comprise of mock scenarios and examples to help clarify the practical application of the Regulation.

Please note that a Commission Notice is not legally binding, it is intended to explain in more detail the Regulation. Notices are usually considered as soft law.

It is highly recommended that U.S. exporters verify the full set of EUDR requirements with their EU importers, who are normally best equipped to research such matters with local authorities, before any goods are shipped.

Information System

The European Commission has officially launched the EUDR Information System where due diligence statements (DDS) under the EU Deforestation Regulation must be submitted. Operators can already submit and manage DDS; these statements are legally binding and their content can be subject to checks by the Member States' competent authorities.

In parallel, the Commission also launched a training server, called ACCEPTANCE Server to allow operators to practice submitting due diligence statements. These practice statements are not legally binding and cannot be subject to checks by the Member States' competent authorities.

Training sessions on the Information System are regularly organized by the European Commission. Training videos are also available on the Commission's website. A User Guide and frequently asked questions about the EUDR Information System are also available here.

Member States Competent Authorities

As of February 1, 2025, 24 out of 27 Member States have designated a competent authority for EUDR which would be responsible for the checks of imports covered by the Regulation.
